THE EFFECT OF MIGRATION ON NORTHERN IRELAND'S LANGUAGES IS THE FOCUS OF LINEN HALL EXHIBITION

On Tuesday 5 November, the Linen Hall launched the exhibition From Home to Here: Stories of Languages Old and New. It explores the socio-cultural and linguistic impact on Northern Ireland of its changing population from when the first Celtic speakers arrived to the present day.

2019 is the International Year of Indigenous Languages and From Home to Here highlights the linguistic influences that have arisen from population movements. The exhibition charts the cultural and linguistic challenges faced by migrants and explores the novel changes which newcomer dialects, languages and cultures bring to their host communities.

The potential for significant cultural contributions is woven into From Home to Here by a series of Arpilleras (three dimensional textiles) which form an integral part of the exhibition. These striking pieces have been produced in conflict zones and are on loan from Conflict Textiles, an international collection which has been exhibited all over the world.

The Arpilleras include 'Life With and Without Bees', which makes an ecological statement about the dwindling bee population. Its message tallies perfectly with the plight of indigenous endangered languages more than half of which could also become extinct by the year 2100.

Two complementary events are also scheduled:

Civic Conversation - Stories of Languages Old and New: Policy and Practice Challenges (Chaired by Prof. Karen Corrigan, Newcastle University)

Wednesday 20 November/ 4.00pm/ free

This Conversation explores the socio-cultural and linguistic impact on language policies and practices in NI. It will celebrate 2019 as the International Year of Indigenous Languages. Invited speakers will be experts in the fields of indigenous and community languages as well as practitioners.
