Commemorating victims of the Italian Fascist concentration camp Kampor, presenting video narratives about Kampor and exhibition opening of “The Last Witnesses” and “Fabrics of Resistance: Women's Voices”

On Saturday, 5 September, the City of Rab organized a commemoration marking the 77th anniversary of the liberation of internees from the Italian Fascist concentration camp Kampor at the Memorial Cemetery, which was for the first time attended by the presidents of Croatia and Slovenia. Italian Fascists interned around 15,000 Croats, Slovenes and Jews in the camp and left them there to die of starvation and disease. The camp was founded in July 1942 and remained active until September 1943 when it was liberated after the capitulation of Italy. The exact number of people who lost their lives in the camp is not known, however, the surviving witness Herman Janež composed a list naming 1490 of the victims.

Following the wreath-laying ceremony and the introductory address, the President of the Rab-Gonars Camp Committee, Herman Janež Jr., held a touching speech about the sufferings of the internees and called for an urgent renovation of the cemetery. Mayor Nikola Grgurić emphasized that any kind of repression should be condemned and that we should focus on creating a more tolerant society.

President of Croatia Zoran Milanović said in his speech that Kampor was the perfect example of Hannah Arendt's concept of the banality of evil since none of the Italian guards overseeing the internees were neither Fascists nor Blackshirts. He added that the Italian authorities had organized camps on the territory of Croatia with the aim of oppressing the local population in the context of which he also mentioned the concentration camp on the island of Molat. He emphasized that the Fascists interned the Jews as well but were in that way actually saving them. The president spoke about how little it takes for a man to become inhumane overnight and that we all carry that potential within us. Therefore, it is important to remember such events and come to the places of suffering to honor the victims. Finally, he expressed his hope that next time the President of Italy would join them in paying tribute to the victims.

Borut Pahor, President of Slovenia, emphasized the responsibility to cherish the memory of the camp victims and the need to pay respects to them personally and on behalf of the Republic of Slovenia. He warned that intolerance and hatred begin with words and small deeds, but can subsequently grow into destructive evils as was the case with Italian Fascism which was at the root of great human suffering in Kampor. He expressed his desire to continue the cooperation and friendly relations between the two countries in a wider European context. Both presidents and Herman Janež Jr. emphasized the importance of the site itself and called for preserving the memory and the memorial cemetery itself. What all speakers agreed on was that in places like this and on such occasions, one should not talk about politics, but focus on keeping the memory of the victims alive and on creating a more just and tolerant society.

The reading of Jure Kaštelan's poem "Chains on the hands" a performance on the guitar and mandolin by two students from Rab contributed to the solemn atmosphere.

Solemn commemoration marking the 77th anniversary of the liberation of Kampor

Following the commemoration, two related exhibitions dedicated to keeping the memory of internment in Italian Fascist camps alive were opened in the Rab City Library, entitled "The Last Witnesses" and "Fabrics of Resistance: Women's Voices". The exhibition was organized and supported by Documenta - Center for Dealing with the Past, Rab Open University, Embassy of the Republic of Slovenia in Croatia, Apis Institute and Conflict Textiles. Presidents Borut Pahor and Zoran Milanovic, who showed a special interest in the exhibition during the tour with the hosts, attended the opening.

The exhibition "The Last Witnesses" includes photographs of people who were interned in the camp as children or even born there and those of their families who hold on to rare items from the camp and in that way preserve the memory of their loved ones and their unfortunate fates. This is a traveling exhibition that is shown in schools in the effort to remember the victims and inform young people about little-known historical events.

The exhibition "Fabrics of Resistance: Women's Voices" consists of two canvases, the so-called arpilleras, which belong to Roberta Bacic, curator of Conflict Textiles collection. Her parents were interned in Kampor. The first piece depicts children rescued by Christians living in a Ghetto using darker tones, while the second one is characterized by a contradictory use of vivid colors in depicting the unfortunate fate of Chilean mothers whose children disappeared during Pinochet's regime.

These two exhibitions are part of a joint project of several Slovenian authors, journalist Saša Petejan, photographer Mance Juvan and historian Dr. Urška Strla. It is also part of a broader educational program called "Guardians of the Spoon" that combines photographs and memories of survivors.

For this occasion, the Apis Institute, in cooperation with Documenta, with the support of the EVZ Foundation, prepared a video narrative about the Kampor camp in five languages so that the information would be available not only to the visitors of the memorial cemetery but also to anyone interested in the topic. The content of the information board at the location of the memorial cemetery has thus been enriched with QR codes that direct the visitor to the video. The codes have also been made available as part of the exhibition at the Rab City Library. A supplement to the existing educational program related to the video narrative has been proposed to primary and secondary schools. In this way, active steps have been taken to preserve the memory of the Fascist camp victims and to make the general public aware of the unhealed wounds from the past with the aim of healing them and working together on a more just and tolerant society.
