Vicarious Resilience:

A New Concept in Work with Those Who Survive Political Violence and Trauma

Pilar Hernandez-Wolfe, Ph.D.
Director, Marriage, Couple & Family Therapy Program,
Lewis & Clark College

Working with trauma survivors as a health or mental health professional is challenging and may place therapists at risk for developing compassion fatigue. However, this work also has the potential to affect therapists in a unique and positive manner. Vicarious resilience describes the positive meaning-making, growth, and transformations in a therapist's experience resulting from exposure to clients' resilience. This presentation examines vicarious resilience processes with trauma therapists who have worked with victims of political violence and educators in the U.S. and Colombia.

Pilar Hernández-Wolfe is associate professor and director of the Marriage, Couple, and Family Therapy Program at Lewis and Clark College. She has worked in Columbia and the U.S. with refugees, displaced populations, and political survivors of torture, and she has collaborated with local and international organizations in the areas of clinical supervision, traumatic stress, resilience, and social and cultural equity.

March 5, 2012 4:30PM Campus Center, 803 UMass Amherst

Sponsored by: The Graduate School; the College of Humanities and Fine Arts; the College of Social and Behavioral Sciences; the Legal Studies Program; the Department of Political Science; and the Vice Chancellor for Research and Engagement. This program was made possible in part by a grant from the UMASS Arts Council and support from the Center for Heritage and Society; the Center for Latin American, Caribbean and Latino Studies; the Center for Public Policy & Administration; the Center for Research on Families; the Commonwealth Honors College; the Department of History; Global Horizons; the Institute for Holocaust, Genocide, and Memory Studies; the Law and Society Initiative; the National Center for Technology and Dispute Resolution; the Psychology of Peace and Violence Program; the Public History Program; the Social Justice Mediation Institute; and the Women of Color Leadership Network-Everywoman's Center.