DODDS RAISES QUINN MURDER WITH PRIME MINISTER

During Prime Minister's Question Time the DUP's North Belfast MP Nigel Dodds outlined the concern in Northern Ireland about the murder of Paul Quinn and reemphasised the importance of the Government's commitment to ensure that if one party is found to be in default then all parties will not be punished. Commenting from Westminster Mr. Dodds said,

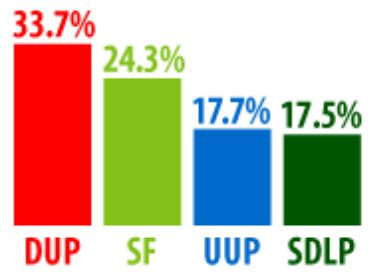

"The Prime Minister will be aware that the horrific murder of Paul Quinn has cast a significant shadow over the stability of the devolved institutions in Northern Ireland. Indeed there have been serious allegations made about the involvement of current members of the Provisional IRA in the murder.

I would call on the Prime Minister to reiterate the commitment already given that if any party, in this case Sinn Fein, is found to be in default that he will not punish all the parties in Northern Ireland but he will ensure devolution continues and that only that party in default will be punished. It is absolutely vital to send a clear message to the people of Northern Ireland who are growing increasingly concerned about the
